Honesty: Honesty means always speaking the truth and living an honest life. Honesty also includes honest thinking and honest activities. It also means not to take other's things illegally.

Necessity of Honesty: The necessity of honesty is immense because-

- i) Honesty gives people respect.
- ii) Gods and goddesses are pleased with them who are honest.
- iii) It makes a person truthful and good.

Relation between honesty and religion: There is a close relation between honesty and religion because, Ishvara and gods and goddesses are pleased with them who have the quality of honesty. Honesty is a part of religion and a moral virtue.

Story of the Woodcutter and the goddess of Water: There was a woodcutter in a village and he had an iron axe. He used to cut wood everyday and by selling that wood in markets, he maintained his family.

There was a river flowing by the village. On the bank of the river there was a forest. One day, the woodcutter went in the forest to cut wood. All on a sudden, the woodcutter's iron axe fell into the river. The woodcutter broke down with worries. Because he could not cut wood without the axe and if he cannot do it daily how he could maintain his family. Then, his wife and children would remain unfed.

At that time the goddess of water came up to him from the river. She had a silver axe in her hand. Goddess of water asked the woodcutter, “Have a look, and is this axe yours?” Having a look the woodcutter said, “No, this is not my axe.”

Then the goddess went away and came back again with a golden axe in her hand. She asked the woodcutter, “See this axe now, and is this yours?” The woodcutter said, “No, this is not also mine.”

The water-goddess dived into water and came again up with an iron axe in her hand. She asked the woodcutter, “Now you see, is this yours?” The woodcutter replied, “Yes this one is my axe.”

The goddess of water was pleased with the woodcutter for his honesty and truthfulness. She gave these three axes to the woodcutter. After that day the woodcutter was no more in want.

Moral Learning of the Story: Through this story of the woodcutter and the water goddess, we have come to know that honesty is a great virtue. Everyone likes honest people. Even the deities love them. So we should be honest. This is the moral learning of this story.
